Leading with Cultural Intelligence

The world increasingly recognizes the need for Cultural Intelligence on top of the usual IQ and EQ expectations. For our leaders from different sectors, be it business or not-for profit, this is exceptionally crucial as they continuously have to grapple with serving or servicing people who are very different than themselves.

Cultural Intelligence can be built over a period of time working with culturally diverse people, thereby translating into cultural competencies with clients. At Common Purpose, we aim to bring about that growth in the shortest period of time possible, helping leaders in the sector develop an awareness of their own understanding of themselves and their own identities, thus gaining competencies in helping others.

Programme Objectives

- See value in differences
- Be more aware of their own responses to differences and learn to adapt to differences
- Better build and develop ideas to support their own organizations and passions
- Channel the passion of people and stakeholders from different backgrounds towards improvement
